

THE NEW YORK WORLD.

Thrice-a-Week Edition—Read
Wherever the English Language is Spoken.

The Thrice-a-Week World long ago established itself in public favor, and it is now recognized as the strongest publication of its kind in the United States. Advertisers and publishers seeking clubbing combinations—and they know best—universally testify to this. It is widely circulated in every State and Territory of the Union, and even in remote South Africa and on the gold fields in the deserts of Australia. These are the things that tell.

Next year we have the Presidential campaign, in which all Americans are deeply interested. Already the issues are being discussed and the two great parties are preparing for the first moves. You will not want to miss any details, and if you subscribe now your year's subscription will cover the campaign from beginning to end.

The Thrice-a-Week World is absolutely fair in its political news. Partisan bias is never allowed to affect its news columns, and Democrats and Republicans alike can obtain in its pages truthful accounts of all the great political contests.

In addition to all the news, the Thrice-a-Week World furnishes the best serial fiction, elaborate market reports and other features of interest.

The Thrice-a-Week World's regular subscription price is only $1.00 per year, and this pays for 156 papers. We offer this unequalled newspaper and the KENTUCKIAN together one year for only $2.50.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $3.00.

A FILIPINO MONKEY

The Troubles of an Army Officer with the Little Beast.

He Was a Nuisance, But Native Custom Prevented the Officer from Refusing a Present—An Unlikely Fate.

The American soldier serving in our East Indian possessions has had abundant reason, doubtless, to regard the Filipinos as treacherous and vindictive. But the somewhat general impression entertained in the United States that those vicious qualities are characteristic of the Filipinos as a people is not fully sustained by the experiences of Europeans who have resided for many years among them.

Strong ties of friendship exist, and exhibitions of gratitude are as zealous, and probably as frequently shown, as among the Christian peoples of other lands.

Possibly a good illustration of the last named trait of character may be found in the case of a poor Filipino who came one day to Lieut. Sutton, a staff officer on duty at the time at the headquarters of the army in Manila, and urged upon the astonished officer the acceptance of a pet monkey as a slight recompense, he said, for some act of kindness which the lieutenant had done for him.

The officer kindly, but firmly, refused the gift, and after thanking his visitor, sent him away.

But the Filipino was not to be gotten rid of so easily. He conceived that he and a debt of gratitude to discharge, and accustomed to duplicity of speech, disbelieved the assurances of the officer that he did not want the monkey, and hastening to the quarters of the lieutenant, fastened the creature by a rope to the bars of an open window.

When the officer reached his quarters, late in the day, he was surprised and extremely annoyed to find the monkey tied to his window. But his annoyance was feebly compared with the righteous vexation he felt when he discovered that the animal had forced its way between the bars of the window into the room, and had made sad havoc with the contents of his private desk that stood within its reach.

A hasty survey of the wreck disclosed the fact that the creature had torn up many of his letters, destroyed some valuable papers, had drunk a bottle of mulligan, upset his ink, and broken a paper knife.

The officer stood, weapon in hand, gazing fixedly at the animal for a moment, actuated by conflicting emotions, and then at last discarding the weapon, hastily severed the rope with which the creature was tied, and hurried it in no gentle manner out of the house and into an adjoining yard, where he presented it to a Filipino neighbor.

The Filipino tethered the animal to a mango tree that grew in the yard adjoining the officer's quarters. The creature had evidently been accustomed to unrestrained liberty in the family of its former Filipino master, and protested now vigorously and often, against its confinement.

But at last the protests suddenly ceased, and the morning cries of the animal were heard no more.

"And what has become of the monkey?" inquired the lieutenant of his neighbor one day.

"Oh, senor," replied the Filipino, smiling broadly, as he spoke, "the fellow was fat, and we ate him."

"Heavens!" exclaimed the officer. "That was next to cannibalism. You can't tell," he repeated, "just what relationship the thing may have been to you."

"He was very fat," persisted the Filipino, unconscious of the cause of the officer's anxiety. "Since the war began," he continued, "the fat ones have been scarce."

"And you eat monkeys?" exclaimed the officer slowly and impressively.

"Fat ones," answered the man. "Lean ones are tough. 'The Lord save us!' murmured the horrified officer. 'I think I know now why a dog howled at an eating house station upon the Dagupan railroad the other day when a man came out and pounded on a gong.'"

"The dog howled!" said the Filipino, inquiringly, unable to comprehend the connection between a howling dog and the subject in hand.

"Yes," said the officer, continuing his apocryphal story, "the dog howled pitiously until the man told him he did not have to eat it, and sent him away with a kick. I'm afraid now we had lean monkey for dinner, and the dog knew it."

Do Good—It Pays.

A Chicago man has observed that "Good deeds are better than real estate deeds—some of the latter are worthless. Act kindly and gently, show sympathy and lend a helping hand. You cannot possibly lose by it." Most men appreciate a kind word and encouragement more than substantial help. There are persons in this community who can truthfully say: "My good friend, cheer up. A few doses of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will rid you of your cold, and there is no longer whatever from pneumonia when you use that medicine. It always cures. I know it for it has helped me out many a time." Sold by C. K. Wyly, druggist.

Books Being Examined.

The books of the city tax receiver of Louisville, are being examined, as provided by law. The bills outstanding for the past nineteen years amount to $1,099,393.93.

He Learned a Great Truth.

It is said of John Wesley that he once said to Mistress Wesley: "Why do you tell that child the same thing over and over again?" "John Wesley, because once telling is not enough." It is for this same reason that you are told again and again that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cures cold and grip; that it counteracts any tendency of these diseases to result in pneumonia, and that it is pleasant and safe to take. Recovered Her Baby.

Mrs. John McLaughery, of Louisville, recovered her baby and the husband and father will not be prosecuted for kidnapping.

From Across the Rio Grande

Mr. G. A. Fisher, of Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Mexico, is employed in the engineer's office of the Mexican International Railroad. On Sept. 7, 1902, he wrote: "I am recommending Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin to all my friends in this community and others that wish an invaluable remedy for dyspepsia and constipation." Druggists sell this valuable laxative and stomach remedy. If yours does not, send his name to Syrup Pepsin Co., Monticello, Ill., and they will send you a sample bottle and interesting book.

Decided to Cut Down its Force.

To in a measure recoup losses from the flood, the Erie railroad has decided to cut down its force of employees.

While opening a box, J. C. Mount, of Three Mile Bay, N. Y., ran a ten penny nail through the fleshy part of his hand. "I thought at once of all the pain and soreness this would cause me," he says, "and immediately applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm and occasionally afterwards. To my surprise it removed all pain and soreness and the injured parts were soon healed." For sale by C. K. Wyly.

UP VESUVIUS BY RAIL.

New Electric Road Takes Tourists to the Crater's Brink.

For more than 20 years there has been a cable railway up the topmost portion of Vesuvius, the cone of ashes that surmounts the more active crater. A few people have used it, but in order to do so it has been necessary until recently to take a long and rather tedious stage ride from Naples. By means of the new electric railroad it is now possible to avoid a large part of the inconvenience.

The new line starts from Resina, which is built above the ruins of Herculaneum, and connects with the lower end of the cable railway. Over parts of the new line the cars run as they do on an ordinary trolley road, the grade being so gentle that slipping is impossible. Elsewhere, the slope being steeper, the old-fashioned "rack" is employed, like that on Mount Washington, in this country, or the one which goes up the Jungfrau. The recently constructed road is composed of three sections. On the first, about two miles long, and the third, whose length is a plump mile and a half, the cars go without special help. On the intermediate section, a mile long, assistance is requisite, and there an electric locomotive is coupled on to the cars. From the under side of this engine reach downward two strong cog wheels that engage a continuous rack in the roadbed, which operation enables the car to climb with certainty, though slowly, when the power is turned on.

It has been possible to utilize the natural surface of the volcano most of the way. Very little cutting or filling was necessary. When any mason work was at all employed the material employed was cold lava, of which there was an abundance at hand. The gauge of the track is one meter, and light rails have been available, though the quality of the construction was superior. As an electric road from Naples to the vicinity of Resina has been running for years, the trip is now made very comfortably.

THE POWER OF A TITLE.

Is Considerable Even in Democratic America—The "General."

The United States is not much given to titles and certainly there are but few with which to compare, but the titles "General" and "Captain" seem to carry a great deal of weight in connection with privileges incident to the emperors.

This, says the New York Times, was observed in a particularly striking manner the day of the second contest between Shamrock III. and Reliance. The revenue cutter Gresham, flagship of the patrol fleet, a tug, and two men, accompanied by women guests, figured in the incident.

The cutter Gresham was off St. George. The harbor cutters Winismmett and Mackinac were transferring people bound for the yacht races to the ocean-going cutters. The harbor cutters laid alongside the Gresham two or three times, as well as several other of the big cutters.

The last time but three or four people crawled over the upper works of the Gresham. Captain Walker shouted: "Are there any more going to board the Gresham?"

"Ship ahoy?" was wafted from off the port side. Instantly all was attention on the bridge and deck of the Gresham.

"Gen. — and Capt. — are about to come aboard," shouted a deck hand from near the pilot house of the tug.

The blue jackets and the white jackets on the Gresham sprang to the port gangway to receive the "General" and "Captain." Up they came with their friends, and none seemingly enjoyed the race more than they.

The "General" and "Captain" were in civilian garb. The "General" was a foreman of a gang of municipal employees, and his companion likewise has about as much claim to a title.

WITH NATURE IN THE WOODS.

This Time We Go There, However, Without a Fowling Piece.

I think the day will come, and it is not, perhaps, so distant as it seems, says Julius Norregard, in Success, when the idea of killing anything for pleasure will seem so strange as to be scarcely credible. The Anglo-Saxon's proverbial pastime of going out and killing something will seem hardly less amazing than the gladiatorial shows.

Ah, yes! to know all the birds of the wood—without a gun! With a gun how can one know them, what fascinating knowledge a man misses! A dead bird! A handful of blood-stained feathers! Little more than that! Carry on for the sexton beetle or for the feasting fly! But the living bird—what a vivid, mysterious creature it is, with its lovely bright eyes, and those sad vowels in its throat! It seems strange to think of what that little head knows, secrets of nature eternally hidden from us. Is not the bird itself one of nature's secrets? The woodland, which to us is a wilderness, is to him a city, of which he knows all the streets and all of the inhabitants. All the invisible highways of the air are to him like well-trodden paths, and when he darts off in that apparently casual way he very well knows whither he is going and what business takes him. When he sits and whistles by the hour on some swaying pinnacle of the greenwood there is some meaning in all beyond the music. That meaning will ever be hidden from us. If we could know it, as Tennyson said of the "flower in the crannied wall," we "should know what God and man are."

If, instead of shooting the bird, scotching the snake, smashing the beetle and pinching the tiny life out of the butterfly, we were to watch any one of these creatures on a summer day, the day would pass like an hour, so packed with exciting experience it would seem. Through what mysterious coverts of the woodland, into what a haunted underworld of tunneled banks and hidden ditches and secret passages the snake would show us the way; and we should have strange hearts if, as we thus watched it through its mysterious day, we did not find our dislike of the clever little creature dying away, and even changing into a deep tenderness towards the small, self-reliant life, so lonely a speck of existence in so vast a world.

BABY SQUIRREL OVERBOARD.

With Skill and Gentleness the Mother Rescued Youngster.

"I was very much amused and very much instructed recently," said a man who lives in the country, according to the New York Mail and Express, "by the antics of a mother squirrel in my section, and while I have grown up, as I might say, among squirrels and cypress trees, it was a revelation to me. The squirrel had nested in low, dumpy cypress close to the edge of a lake, and the nest was probably 30 or 40 feet from the ground. The mother squirrel happened to be in the tree at the time, although I had no occasion to notice either the old squirrel or her young until something tragical happened in the family. In some way one of the little fellows scrambled over the edge of the nest and fell to the ground. I heard the noise, and, looking in the direction of the sound, I saw the baby squirrel squirming around in great agony and totally unable to get on its feet. The mother squirrel rushed down the side of the cypress like a streak, and almost in an instant she was by the side of her offspring. She took in the situation at a glance and set to work to get the youngster back in the nest. She switched the body around and turned it over and then grabbed it with her teeth just under the smaller portion of the back. Instinctively, I suppose, the young squirrel threw its arms around the mother's body and after she made sure that the hold was good she started cautiously back to the nest. She reached there safely and I saw no more of the distressed mother nor the youngster. I was very much impressed with the gentleness and skill she displayed in handling the injured baby squirrel, and really it was an inspiring scene."
